Anna (Anneke) van der Feer (1902-1956) was a painter and a convinced communist. Life and art were a unity for her. She was an independent woman and a political activist. Her life and art served the working class. In 1928 she got into a relationship with the filmmaker Joris Ivens and in 1931 they moved to Moscow. She made drawings there which she sent to the Netherlands for political magazines. Ivens left Moscow in 1936, but Van der Feer still lived there. She was convinced that she was involved in a decisive struggle, after which she lived in Paris and in 1940 she resettled in Amsterdam. Her work is focused on reality in a powerful expressive realistic style and is related to the work of Charley Toorop and Dick Ket, among others (Ruud van der Velden).

Following his defeat in the Third Mysore War (1790-1792) the British made Tipu Sultan cede part of his dominions, pay a substantial financial settlement and surrender two of his 16 sons as hostages. Princes Mohin-ud-din (or Moiz-ud-din) (aged eight) and Abdul Khalik (aged ten) were accordingly delivered to Lord Cornwallis, the Governor-General of India, at Seringapatam on 26 February 1792. In February 1794, after the fulfilment of the treaty, the princes returned to Seringapatam. They enjoyed a few years of peace but the conflict between Mysore and the British resumed in 1799. On 4 May that year Mysore's capital was captured and Tipu Sultan was killed alongside 10,000 of his subjects. The princes were captured by Major-General David Baird, who treated them with great respect and arranged for their safe passage out of the devastated city. After laying their dead father to rest they were then sent to Vellore. In 1806, following a mutiny at Vellore among the soldiers of the Madras Army, the princes were exiled to Calcutta along with the rest of Tipu's family, lest they become a figurehead for opposition to British rule in southern India. - Fine.

ADDENDA

Cornelis de Bruyn (1652-1727), Dutch author, artist and traveller. He started his first journey in 1674 visiting the Levant. He left the Netherlands on his second journey in 1701. He travelled first to Russia for a year before going on to Persia. There he remained for the years 1704-1705. On his return voyage he resided in Persia again between 1706 and 1707 describing the ruins of Persepolis. His narratives are largely valued for the engravings executed from De Bruyn's drawings.

The large panoramic views, the first truthful images, are from the French edition Voyages par la Moscovie, en Perse et aux Indes, translated from the Dutch edition Reizen over Moskovie door Persie en Indie.
